The Audi Convertible was a very aspirational car from very early on in its life and got the Audi brand in front of a wider audience than just the motorsport fraternity. The pivotal point for this model though was Princess Diana choosing one as her daily driver in 1994. Designed to compete with the German luxury mid-sized vehicle segment, which until then was clearly dominated by Mercedes-Benz and BMW, the B4 Audi 80 and its variants were highly successful and popular. The B4 saloon was discontinued at the end of the 1994 model year. The Cabriolet, however, was carried on until 2000. As of the 1998 model year, it underwent a few minor yet visible touch-ups in its European version, such as gently redesigned bumpers and instrument clusters, projection lens headlights and more options available.

A late model manufactured in 1999, 'V925 DWH' is presented in the extremely rare Java Green paintwork complemented by a grey half-leather and houndstooth interior featuring sports seats. Powered by the 1.8L engine option mated to a 5-speed manual transmission, this particular example was specified from factory with ABS, power adjustable heated mirrors and variable cargo area. Purchased by its current owner from a deceased estate, this Audi 80 has recently been subject to significant recommissioning work to bring the vehicle up to their standard. This work included a replacement cambelt with auxiliary belts, replacement radiator, full service, the wheels refurbished, calipers painted and finally replacement tyres all round.

'V925 DWH' comes with an MOT valid until 29 March 2023 and the V5C which displays just 2 former keepers. The history file is impressive, with MOT certificates nearly every year from 2005 through to current, a large collection of invoices dating back to 2004, its original backpack including owner's manual, breakdown pack, leather booklet and service booklet which contains 6 main dealer stamps until 2006 and more. Currently displaying 100,186 miles on the odometer, the vendor rates the condition of the bodywork, engine, electrical equipment, paintwork, transmission and interior trim all as 'Very Good'.
